

Debra's Story

Debra Gale, U.S. Department of Health and Human Services

My cause is cancer research. My siblings and I were adults when we were told our dad had stage 4 bone cancer. He was the patriarch of our family and died at a young age of 73. During my dad's final days, I remember him telling me that he had so much more to do and give. His words have resonated with me since his passing, and I look for opportunities to give back, as giving is instilled in my heart. The CFC is a trusted, user-friendly platform that allows me to support my charities, so they can continue to help those in need. My donation could possibly assist with building a new research center or providing glass slides to analyze cancer cells. It could also help scientists get closer to finding a cure. Every donation matters, whether it is small or large. When I give through the CFC, I feel confident knowing my donation will reach my designated charity.

“My cause is cancer research. My dad was diagnosed with stage 4 bone cancer. I remember him telling me he had so much more to do and give. Those words have resonated with me and I look for ways to give back. The CFC allows me to support my charities, so they can continue to help those in need.”

